Massachusetts. Additionally, of note, the interviewing agents observed that [REDACTED] name was still on the apartment's mailbox when [REDACTED] was interviewed.

Boston obtained information that two weeks after the interview, on August 8, 2004, Massachusetts Department of Corrections visiting records showed that [REDACTED] was noted to reside at [REDACTED] MA. And, on October 16, 2004, the visiting records also indicated that he lived at the [REDACTED] address. Those records were generated when [REDACTED] visited [REDACTED] who was convicted of a host of federal and state crimes ([REDACTED] [REDACTED] etc.) related to his involvement in the United Freedom Front, a defunct left-wing terrorist group.

Background:

In addition to residing in [REDACTED] [REDACTED] was a possible suspect because of the following factors:

- He was at a Black Tea Society planning meeting where criminal activity was discussed as part of the planned protests against the Democratic National Convention [REDACTED]
- He is believed to be a member of the Northeastern Federation of Anarcho-Communists (NEFAC). NEFAC is composed of a dozen sub-groups located in the United States and Canada whose goal is to overthrow the United States Government. Individual members of NEFAC have engaged in a wide variety of violent criminal activity at various anti-globalization demonstrations. They have been arrested for assaulting federal police officers, assaulting white supremacists with bats and knives, and various other crimes.
- Members of NEFAC have been identified as engaging in firearms training with the Anarchist Black Cross Federation, [REDACTED]

Synopsis: Discrepancy in the residence of [REDACTED]

Details: In interviews shortly after an IED exploded on July 23, 2004, Boston may have been provided with false information regarding the whereabouts of one of the possible suspects in the time surrounding the explosion.

On July 23, 2004, an IED exploded in the vicinity of Copps Hill, Boston, Massachusetts. One of the initial possible suspects was [REDACTED], an alleged member of several Boston anarchist groups, who was known to reside in [REDACTED]. When Boston visited [REDACTED] apartment, the agents were told by his former roommate that [REDACTED] had vacated the apartment eight months previously. The roommate, [REDACTED], SS# [REDACTED], cell # [REDACTED] claimed that [REDACTED] then resided in [REDACTED].
